

Dr Sinn Won Han

Assistant Professor

Department of Sociology, HKU

Sinn Won Han is Assistant Professor in the Department of Sociology at the University of Hong Kong. Before joining HKU, Sinn Won was a postdoctoral associate at Cornell University Jeb E. Brooks School of Public Policy. Sinn Won received his doctoral degree from the Department of Sociology at Harvard University. Sinn Won is a demographer who studies patterns, causes, and consequences of the low fertility in developed societies. Under this overarching topic, his current research explores three themes: (1) Whether and how does the radius of trust matter for fertility intentions and behaviors? (2) Is the “left-right political fertility gap” indeed the case in advanced industrial democracies, as some politicians and commentators are putting it? (3) Do sustained low fertility and population aging retard economic growth? If so, does the decline in “economic dynamism” (e.g., declining technological innovations and entrepreneurship) mediate the two phenomena?
