Stuart Gietel-Basten is a Professor of Social Science and Public Policy at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology (HKUST), where he also serves as the Associate Dean for Research in the School of Humanities and Social Science. With an academic background in demography and social policy, he specialises in the study of fertility, aging, and population policy, particularly with a regional focus on Asia.

He earned his BA(Hons) in History, followed by an MPhil in Economic and Social History, and a PhD in Historical Demography from the University of Cambridge. Additionally, he completed a Postgraduate Diploma in Teaching and Learning in Higher Education from the University of Oxford.

He has authored and edited several influential books, including "The Population Problem in Pacific Asia" and edited "Family Demography in Asia: A Comparative Analysis of Fertility Preferences." His numerous peer-reviewed articles contribute to a deeper understanding of demographic dynamics and their implications for social policy.

In addition to his academic contributions, Gietel-Basten is actively involved in research and policy development, having secured substantial grants for projects related to aging and demographic challenges. His work emphasises the importance of evidence-based policy-making in addressing contemporary social issues.
