

Lidan Lyu

Associate Professor at the School of Population and Health Renmin University of China

Lidan Lyu is an Associate Professor at the School of Population and Health, Renmin University of China. She earned her doctoral degrees in demography from Renmin University, and completed postdoctoral research at Peking University. Her research focuses on population migration, and especially in how changes in migration patterns shape the development of children and adolescents in China. She also works on population policy, demographic analysis, and time use. Dr. Lyu has led 16 research projects, including studies supported by the National Social Science Fund of China, Natural Science Foundation of China, the National Bureau of Statistics of China, and UNICEF. She has published more than 40 articles as a major author in Chinese and international journals, including Population and Development Review, Urban Studies, Population Research (《人口研究》), and Chinese Journal of Population Science (《中国人口科学》).